Comedy/Mockumentary Narrative Short Film. 29 Min

In 2013, a documentary film crew followed world-famous fire-eater Tony 'Volcano' Valenci for 90 days on his quest to set a world record. This is his story.

Tony 'Volcano' Valenci has spent his life attempting to set a world record. All of his friends and colleagues have world records. Even his ex-wife has a world record. Now it's Tony's turn. Tony is determined to be the first man to blow fire while skydiving, and he won't let anything stand in his way, not even himself.

Through testimonials from Tony's friends and colleagues—such as the world's fastest knife-thrower—his ex-wife, and his skydiving coaches, we piece together Tony's roller coaster ride of a journey to get his name in the record books. But will Tony go down in history, or will he go down in flames?

Director’s Statement

Tony “Volcano” Valenci is nothing short of a modern-day Don Quixote. His heart is in the right place and only his own ambitions can keep him from achieving his wildest dreams. (And believe me, they’re wild). It’s easy to laugh at larger-than-life characters like Tony, and I think that’s why we’re able to let our guards down and let Tony into our hearts. If we’re all truly honest with ourselves, there’s a little bit of Tony in each and every one of us.

I strive to make films that show people things they’ve never seen before. And so I’m proud to say that I’ve never seen a movie quite like Down in Flames. I was lucky to bring on most of the same crew from my previous shorts such as Beyond Belief and Break A Leg, as well as my first feature film, Lies I Told My Little Sister; the “usual suspects,” I’ve come to call them. I don’t think any of us really knew what we were getting ourselves into when we set out to make this film. But by the time my cinematographer Alex Gallitano and I were wearing parachutes and sitting in a plane with no doors to get a shot of the skydiving scene, we knew that we had something special on our hands.

I say this a lot, but I truly believe that if my films are any good, it’s because I’ve been able to surround myself with people who are better at their jobs than I am at mine. And on this film, that was even more true than usual. If you’d told me a year ago that I’d be working with the world’s fastest and most accurate knife thrower, I certainly wouldn’t have believed you.

But now, here we are, with our own little sideshow of sorts, putting on display the weird, exciting, shocking talents of half a dozen artists who have made names for themselves defying reality and doing the impossible every single day. It was truly an inspiring and humbling process from start to finish. Taking this journey with Tony was one of the most gratifying experiences of my life. Having never worked on anything even remotely close to a documentary, I quickly found myself exploring new terrain. But I lived to tell the tale, which is more than I can say for a certain somebody in our troupe...

There will be those that watch this film and ask how much of it is true. To which, the only fitting response is: all of it. Because why would anybody go to such great lengths to make up such a farfetched and ridiculous story? To do such a thing would make me as crazy as Tony “Volcano” Valenci himself.

Film production to begin in Phillipsburg on Aug. 23

Warren Reporter By Warren Reporter

on August 07, 2013 at 10:24 AM, updated August 07, 2013 at 10:26 AM

Tony 'Volcano' Valenci

Starting on Aug. 23, a film crew will be showing up in different locations in Phillipsburg. They're shooting a compelling new film, "Down In Flames: The True Story of Tony 'Volcano' Valenci." Tony is a colorful character; a fire-eater trying to find his way into the record books.

This film will combine the talents of director William J. Stribling and R.J. Lewis, a resident of Phillipsburg. The two previously worked together on the award-winning short film, "Beyond Belief." This dark comedy was Stribling's NYU thesis film about a down-on-his-luck magician trying to make his troubles disappear.

"Beyond Belief" has been an Official Selection of more than 22 film festivals across the globe, winning several awards and nominations along the way, including Lewis taking home Best Actor In A Short Film at the Los Angeles Comedy Festival.

The duo are thrilled for the chance work together again. Stribling is directing "Down In Flames" while Lewis is the executive producer through his nonprofit company Arjay Entertainment, Incorporated. Stribling was quoted saying, "Phillipsburg is the ideal location to shoot this film. It has just what we're looking for." Cinematographer Alex Gallitano, who shot "Beyond Belief," will join the crew as director of photography.

The crew will follow the exploits of Tony 'Volcano' Valenci, renowned fire eater, as he takes on increasingly difficult stunts to reach his goal of a world record. Included in the film will be world record holders David "Throwdini" Adamovich, champion knife-thrower; Richie Magic, the "human ashtray;" and Todd Robbins, light bulb-eating champion. These record holders will comment on their association with Tony and how they hope for him to succeed in his quest to get his name in the record books.

"Down in Flames" is a classic story turned on its head, but one that connects with people on a deeper level. We all have a little bit of "Tony" in us; that yearning to push the boundaries and see what we're capable of achieving.

This film is packed full of amazing feats, including fire eating, fire juggling, fire blowing, light bulb eating, sword swallowing, cigarette eating, and even sky diving. Tony's quest for greatness takes him on a wild journey, one that will both inspire and entertain audiences and artists alike.

This film is being shot "documentary-style," so if you see a camera crew on the streets of Phillipsburg, don't be alarmed. It is all part of the creation of a motion picture that will be featured in film festivals around the world.
