Abi must face the consequences of her online trolling when her victims take her to court.

Synopsis

From career-ending LinkedIn posts to life-ruining Yelp posts, Abi's online tomfoolery knows no bounds. However, in a world where online misconduct isn't tolerated, she must confront her online targets face-to-face in this satirical courtroom drama.

About the Film

Loosely based on my own social media antics, Internet Court is a satirical take on what could one day become reality given the power of the internet. I've always had fun purposely breaking the unspoken rules of social media and harmlessly trolling my friends, but Internet Court explores what could ensue if someone took the trolling to ridiculously harmful and malicious extents.

This film was a result of five weeks of very close collaboration with my producer and DP/editor, and I'm very grateful to have had the opportunity to work with them. We were originally assigned to work together at school, but I can't imagine working with anyone else. We had the privilege of working with a team of talented and humble actors and the most supportive and hard-working crew. If there's anyone I'd refrain from cyberbullying, it's the wonderful cast and crew of Internet Court.

About the Director

Hi, I'm Alyssa! I'm a writer/producer/director currently studying film production at USC's School of Cinematic Arts. A self-proclaimed dad joke connoisseur, I strive to find the comedy in all situations and hope to showcase these moments in my work.

I'd love to one day follow in the footsteps of Mindy Kaling, Tina Fey, or Amy Poehler and become a comedy TV showrunning writer/producer/director extraordinaire. Or at least become one of those!
