Synopsis

Dedicated to all those who yearn for the wild islands but who are halfway through.

Once upon a time, a group of people held a firm belief and went to a place called wild island. Some people have been shaken before they have gone. So they stopped in the middle of the road and never wanted to move again. After a long time, they rusted. In a dream full of rust, they sneered at the group of people who came from afar.

Director Statement

People in this life are too easy to fold on the road, and too many people have seen halfway.

The theme is very realistic and the picture is realistic. The narration of the copy, I will write lighter, try to get close to the poem.

I dare not say that we have made a lot of black and white, but I really feel the color image.

Back to the theme, even if we are on the road, we will find colors in the black and white world.
