ABBY AND EMILY GO TO PALM SPRINGS

A film by Hellin Kay
2020 / USA / Color / 14 Minutes / English

"I love exploring relationships in a real, unflinching way. It's important to examine ourselves even when it feels uncomfortable." -- Hellin Kay, Director

SYNOPSIS

Abby and Emily are from two different worlds but so badly want to mold them into one. This is a story many of us have lived through; the roller coaster of communication and misunderstandings and trying to speak another person's love language, which sometimes gets lost in translation. And also, trying not to kill the person you love while on a vacation together.

ABBY AND EMILY GO TO PALM SPRINGS is a brief glimpse into the lives of two very different women from equally divergent worlds who have just started dating, as they try to navigate their particular language of love on a road trip to Palm Springs.

With the occasional intrusion of friends from both camps, it doesn't attempt to resolve every romantic blunder but instead exposes the raw roller coaster of emotions that rise to the surface even as love starts to set in.

It is at times funny, maddening, confusing, painful, and in the end, very real.

In short, love drives you crazy. But it's worth the ride.

"I made this film because it makes me feel seen and shows the beauty of surrendering to the messiness of love."

-- Nancy Degnan, Producer

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

ABBY AND EMILY is a universal story but also one with an obvious personal connection to my own life. It is the story of one woman who recently comes out as Queer and her partner, who has always been confidently gay and out. They come from very different backgrounds, different careers, and different lifestyles, but the one thing they have in common is each other. And the insanity of trying to communicate with someone you love.

My mom and I came to the US from the Soviet Union in 1980 after months of traveling as refugees through Europe. At 15 I fell in love with creating music videos and decided I wanted to make films for the rest of my life, which I've managed to do in one form or another ever since. I also knew I wanted to be with women by the time I was in middle school, but sex and sexuality were not big topics in my household. Russian immigrants are not really known for their skills in communication and it took a lot of effort to unlearn some of that stuff. In the back of my mind I always knew I would eventually end up with a woman as my life partner. One of my first short films, which I made at 21 in New York, centered on a young woman contemplating a marriage proposal from her boyfriend as she struggles with her sexuality and what she wants out of life. Spoiler alert, she says no to the proposal.

I've always tried to tell women's stories in a real, raw and uncompromising way, even when it was scary to expose my own struggles. I have spent a lifetime searching for answers and figuring out what it means to be a woman and who gets to dictate what we say, how we act, who we date and where we belong. And the answer I have come full circle to is no one but US. No one but YOU gets to decide any of that. It's taken me a minute to remember that.

DIRECTOR Q&A

Why did you make your film? I really wanted to tell a love story that is not perfect, that doesn't pretend to be all sunshine and roses; a messy story, which a lot of people experience but don't really want to talk about. The fighting, the inability to communicate and the deep felt desire to connect with another human. Regardless of your sexuality or sexual orientation this applies to all relationships.

Imagine I'm a member of the audience. Why should I watch this film? I think if you've ever been in any kind of relationship you will relate. It may make you cringe or cry or laugh but it will also make you feel less alone because we all deal with this need to be heard and the deep frustration and even anger when we are not.

How do personal and universal themes work in your film? Falling in love is as complicated as the human condition itself. You can feel lonely in a relationship as much as you can also feel ecstatic while basking in someone else's love. Figuring out who we are while also contemplating who we belong with is a lifetime process and whether we are single or coupled it is convoluted and can be equally painful and joyful. Kind of like everything in life.
